

PRESIDENTIAL ISSUE.

The Argonaut thus outlines some of the issues of the next Presidential campaign:

The national election contest for the Presidency in 1892 will be upon commanding issues. That which will dominate with all classes of American citizens must inevitably bear with it the popular vote. There is at present perceptible only one such issue. It is that of amending the laws which regulate and govern immigration and naturalization. The tariff and protection, reciprocity and free trade, and everything connected with the whole subject, will be nothing more than incidental issues, each State to be guided by the peculiar industries and interests of its people. Manufacturing New England will advocate a tariff for the fostering of manufactures. But it must be taken into account that in many of the States—north, south and west—manufacturing is all the time growing in importance. Hence the prevailing vote of the New England States will be so much fortified by the vote of these emulating States in respect to a tariff that shall make protection to manufactures. The people of the producing States will, very naturally, cast their votes in furtherance of their own interests. The vote of the large cities will be according to the influence and control of the local bosses in politics without regard to national issues. Jefferson was right in characterizing cities as scabs upon the body politic in his day. Since that time, politics in cities have become a fine art, in the sense that De Quincy made murder one of the fine arts. It is the vote of the country which declares the popular sentiment, notwithstanding the vote of the cities may sometimes make the result, as New York made it in 1884, upon the senseless alliteration of the senile preacher who gabbed of "rum Romanism, and rebellion." There is no political principle involved in the tariff. It is simply a measure, and every community, every commonwealth, will adopt or reject tariff measures agreeably to their own interest. The happy thought of the shrewd politician who declared himself in favor of free trade, with incidental protection—each industry and interest to be protected by the tariff—made the convenient sliding scale for every class of voters. California wants protection for her wines and fruits, Massachusetts wants protection for her manufactures, Louisiana for her sugar, and Pennsylvania for her iron and her coal—the producing States from free trade in whatever they do not produce and high tariff on everything else that is required. The tariff will not be a distinctive party issue in 1892 as it was in 1888.

The question of money standard—whether gold and silver, according to the constitution, or gold alone, agreeably to act of Congress—will largely effect and influence the popular vote in all of the States. In the Atlantic States of the North, the gold standard will no doubt prevail; in Pennsylvania, in New York, and in New England, almost to a certainty. Silver will find strong advocacy in the States of the North-West, in the West and South, and in every one of the States of the Pacific. Gold and silver, the constitutional money of the republic, will be reinstated by the popular vote unless present indications fail of conclusion.

The Farmers' Alliance movement will exercise potential influence in the campaign. There is manifest a disposition among the people to break away from party ranks and dissolve former political affiliation. Democracy is no longer anything better than an ancient name, a mummy swathed in the wrapping of Jeffersonian period and bearing the token of Jacksonian impressment. It is as the old new rifle of fresh-made lock, stock, and barrel, without a particle of the original weapon except the ramrod alone. Republicanism is between processes of alteration decay, and whether it shall continue and improve or fail and finish, as the saying goes depends. The farmers of the republic created the Republican party. The cities have managed to obtain large control of the party, and professional politician profit by it. Unless the farmers rally to its support, it will sink, and as it succeeded to the estate of the old Whig party, largely reinforced by sturdy recruits from the Democratic ranks, so will it be succeeded by the invincible party which the farmers will again organize for their own protection and the greater glory of the republic.
